This passage doesn't only give a clear explanation of what happens when we die, but the fact that our spirits return to God shows how God is truly sovereign over life and death. God does not just create life, but when the time comes and our bodies go to the ground, He takes back what's His. God is the author of life; He forms our bodies, gives us life, and when He wills, our bodies go in the ground and our spirits return to Him who gave them.

It is true that we are saved by grace through faith but this doesn't mean that we are free to do whatever we wish. In this passage. James explains the importance of works in the Christian life. The example given in vs 15-16 shows us how saying that we have is meaningless without action. This is explaining to us how true faith will always produce good works. Just like how a heart without a heartbeat is a dead heart, faith with out works is dead faith. Like James, we ought to show our faith by our works

CATECHISM REFERENCE - Philippians 1:23

It is a common human tendency to fear death. Sometimes even Christians fear death. But the truth is that Christians have nothing to fear. In fact, we have everything to look forward to. When we die, we not only go to heaven but we also go to be with Jesus. That is far greater than our lives on earth. So we can serve God with joy and boldness, looking forward to that beautiful day when we will meet Jesus face to face.
